PROGRAM NOTE

Three Solos for Violin and Piano from SWAN LAKE

Concertmaster solos in Tchaikovsky's music take a prominent place. His third and fourth Suite (Mozartiana) and the second movement of the Piano Concerto No.2 feature the solo violin. In the Imperial Ballet in St. Petersburg, the violin solos were performed by the Solo Violinist of the Tsar, a title bestowed by the tsar upon the finest violinists in all of Russia.

As the ballet solos were performed by the likes of Henri Wieniawski and Leopold Auer, the composers gave free reign to their creative inspiration and wrote some of their most gorgeous lyrical and virtuoso music for solo violin. The White Swan Pas De Deux and the Black Swan Pas De Deux are of extraordinary beauty expressing love and impending drama. The Russian Dance is a virtuoso showpiece foreshadowing the last movement of the composer's violin concerto.

Tchaikovsky's Three Solos from Swan Lake is wonderful music for violinists who love to "sing" with their instruments in private or recital performances. The writing of the solos signifies a momentous point in ballet and musical history, indicating the first time in which a solo violin was used for musical accompaniment of dancers in a major ballet.

Swan Lake was composed sometime between 1875-76 and premiered about two years before the composer's Violin Concerto in D Major was first performed. It points to the question of whether Tchaikovsky, after the Three Solos, had started to conceive his concerto. The music is lyrical, technically difficult, melodically and harmonically emotive.
